

"A heemo-WHAT?!!!"

By Joan King

"You have a hemangioma."

(Well, whatever that is, it sure sounds awful, doesn't it? Why doesn't the doctor look worried? What is it? Is it dangerous? Isn't anything that ends with "-oma" a tumour? Is it cancer?)

Actually, the doctor usually says, "Oh, it's JUST a hemangioma." Yes, in fact, it is a tumour. It is a tangle of blood vessels that appear to invade surrounding tissue. A hemangioma, by definition, is not cancerous. Three out of one hundred people even without hepatitis have one. Usually hemangiomas need no treatment and cause no problems. The difficulty is for the doctor to decide if what appears on the ultrasound is, indeed, a hemangioma, and not something else. One way to do this is to wait and see. If it grows, it's not a hemangioma. Usually the diagnosis is quite obvious to the doctor. Sometimes it's not, and then more steps should be taken, such as

1. An alpha-fetoprotein test.
2. A CAT scan
3. An ultrasound-guided biopsy

Some studies have shown that up to 50% of supposed hemangiomas in people with cirrhosis are, in fact, liver cancers, and researchers suggest further studies on all hemangiomas in patients with cirrhosis. If your doctor won't do further studies, basing the opinion only on an ultrasound without a contrasting agent (an IV dye), a second opinion might be warranted, especially in patients with hepatitis C, and more especially if you have cirrhosis.
